Supported Employment (SE) providers have the honor and challenge of working with individuals with disabilities, connecting them with jobs that allow them to unleash their full potential. This population comes in all shapes and sizes, with unique needs and strengths. Sometimes these needs, especially those with the most significant disabilities, call into question for even the best SE providers if there is a way to move forward.

This session will focus specifically on those with the most significant disabilities, their unique challenges, and providing concrete tools for SE providers to properly support these with the utmost needs as they pursue and obtain competitive, integrated employment.
